PREFACE

This report is published by the Food Security Research Project (FSRP) and the Division of Agricultural Statistics (DSA) of the Ministry of Agriculture, Animal Resources, and Forestry (MINAGRI). The FSRP/DSA unit collects and publishes agricultural statistics and conducts agricultural policy studies on key food security issues.

Funding for FSRP is provided by the Food Security II Cooperative Agreement between the Department of Agricultural Economics of Michigan State University (MSU) and the United States Agency for International Development (USAID) through the Office of Agriculture and Food Security, Economic Growth Centre, Global Bureau (AFS/EG/G), and the USAID Rwanda Mission.

This report presents preliminary information on the activities of 51 national and international non-governmental organizations (NGOs) involved in Rwanda's agricultural sector. The results are compiled from an NGO survey that was conducted in late 1999 to early 2000.

In early 2001, all the NGOs who responded to the survey received a draft of this report. In May 2001, follow-up discussions of the report were held with several NGOs based in Kigali. The purposes of these discussions were: 1) to review the document for accuracy; 2) to discuss the interest in, and feasibility of maintaining a database of NGO activities; and, 3) to solicit ideas concerning the most useful policy and program discussions that could be organized based on the results presented in this report.

The MINAGRI also distributed the report to all the ministry's departmental directors, the provincial agricultural officers (DRSAs) and national MINAGRI project officers. The MINAGRI subsequently requested FSRP to help run a one day workshop to discuss the report among these officers. The purpose of this short workshop was to offer an opportunity for MINAGRI national and provincial officers to exchange information and views concerning their relationships with NGOs and their perception of the contributions of NGOs to agricultural development (see appendix 11). Attendees were divided into three small groups in order to facilitate an open discussion. One group was composed of the departmental directors and project officers while two other groups were composed of the provincial level personnel (DRSAs).

Each group was asked to address and then report on seven questions/issues related to NGOs: the actual relationship with NGOs; the contribution of NGOs to their work, and ideas for improving this contribution; constraints in working with NGOs and ideas for resolving these constraints; support provided by the MINAGRI to NGOs; and, the type of training that would be useful for MINAGRI staff in order to improve their capability to work with NGOs.

Following a presentation of each group's discussion of these items, the workshop participants developed the following four recommendations:

1. Organize a follow-up workshop with NGOs, MINAGRI (ministerial department directors and provincial officers) and selected representatives from MINALOC¹ in order to discuss the issues and concerns raised in the MINAGRI workshop.
2. Improve relationships among the provincial administrative authorities and the MINAGRI officers in order to assure a more effective overview of NGO activities within each prefecture.
3. Create an NGO coordination unit in each prefecture similar to that in Gitarama.
4. Improve the oversight capacity of MINAGRI for the NGOs active in agricultural and livestock activities.

Non-Governmental Organizations in Agricultural Development: Preliminary Survey Results

1. INTRODUCTION AND PROBLEM

For several years, the Ministry of Agriculture, Animal Resources and Forestry (MINAGRI) has been reviewing the role that NGOs should play in the development of the country's agricultural, livestock and forestry resources³. Drawing on this review, the government's Agricultural Policy Outline (May 2000) calls for a "radical change of approach" to develop a modern Rwandan agriculture. In addition to identifying several strategic initiatives, the policy identifies a "New National System of Extension" (NNES) that is based on the development of strong farmers' associations and a partnership with local and international non-governmental organizations (NGOs) and the private sector.

In order to implement its agricultural policy, the government will need a clearer view of the capacity of NGOs and of the ways in which they work with farmer associations. It will also be important for the government to understand how different NGOs relate to government agencies and representatives at national, prefectural, and communal levels. An adaptive and multi-pronged policy may be the most appropriate way for the government to take advantage of the different capabilities (and strengths) among NGOs.

The MINAGRI has started to develop an inventory of national and international NGOs working in the agricultural sector. In addition, two NGO coordinating and networking bodies, the CCOAIB (Conseil de Concertation des Organisations d'Appui aux Initiatives de Base) for national NGOs and the NGO Forum for international NGOs are developing databases of their membership. Currently, these databases are used more as catalogues than as resources for decision-making. That is, they are usually limited to address or contact information and some information on an NGO's activities. Moreover, the inventories cannot be searched or queried.

In contrast, an inventory prepared in a relational database can be a powerful decision-making and oversight tool. Such a database can quickly help identify the geographic distribution of NGOs and their activities in each prefecture and commune⁴. It can also easily provide information on the relative size, technical resources and skills of different NGOs. With this type of information, MINAGRI could improve its capability for identifying gaps in service delivery as well as opportunities for collaboration with NGOs.

The purpose of this report is twofold. First, the report provides the first overview of NGO agricultural activities in Rwanda. As such, the report offers new information to inform both governmental and NGO policy and program discussions. Second, the tables presented in this report and appendices help to illustrate the power of the database (Microsoft Access) to respond to a variety of queries or searches generated by different decision-making interests.

⁴ Due to recent administrative changes in Rwanda, the administrative terms of prefecture and commune have now changed to province and district respectively. Some commune boundaries changed as well. Since this survey was conducted before the name change, the old terms will be used in this report.

The database used in the preparation of this report was designed for two purposes. First, it helped to illustrate the feasibility of establishing a national NGO database in a relational database format. Second, much of the information concerning NGO activities and areas of intervention was used as baseline information for preparing a longer-term study on the role of different types of farmer associations in agricultural and rural development⁵.

2. METHODOLOGY

In May 1999 exploratory discussions were held with national and international NGO representatives in Kigali, and field visits were made to farmer associations supported by different NGOs in several prefectures. The purpose of these discussions and visits was to identify the types of data and information that should be included in a working national inventory of NGOs as well as the baseline data needed to select farmer associations for a more in-depth field study.

Based on these discussions and visits, a survey instrument was drafted and distributed to about 100 national and international NGOs that were identified as active in the agricultural sector (this identification was based on 1998 and 1999 inventories prepared by the CCOAIB and the NGO Forum that covered the approximately 175 NGOs active in Rwanda). The survey questionnaire (see Appendix 9) requested information in the following categories:

- identification and contact information;
- goals and objectives;
- types of activities and regions of intervention;
- collaborative relationships (with government and other NGOs);
- organizational capacity (methods of intervention, level of personnel, logistic capacity, budget, and assessment of strengths and weaknesses).

From late 1999 into early 2000, the NGOs were requested by telephone, letter, and personal visit to complete the inventory questionnaire. Fifty-three organizations completed the questionnaire. Based on the information provided in the questionnaire, it was discovered that 2 NGOs were not directly involved in agricultural activities. Consequently, the following sections report the results submitted from 51 NGOs (33 national and 18 international)⁶. Of these organizations, most depend upon bilateral or multilateral agencies for their funding. However, 10 national NGOs and 5 international NGOs are faith-based and/or directly affiliated with, and funded by a religious organization.

⁵ This is an on-going study involving interviews of members of 18 farmer associations countrywide, MINAGRI officers and local government officers (mayors) in the regions where these associations are located.

⁶ Many of those NGOs that did not respond were very small organizations that may no longer have been active at the time the survey instrument was distributed. It is widely known that large numbers of NGOs that had been established in response to relief efforts ceased to operate as attention turned to development activities.

The next section of this report classifies NGOs by their goals and objectives; it provides an overview of the types and breadth of activities carried out in support of those goals and objectives. Section Four summarizes information on the geographic distribution of NGOs and their activities across the prefectures and communes. Section Five examines the technical capacities of NGOs, focusing on the differences between national and international organizations. Section Six discusses issues of collaborative relationships, particularly the development of networks and partnerships. Section Seven draws on the experience of collecting and analyzing the current NGO survey data to make recommendations about what needs to be done to improve the NGO database content and of its utility for MINAGRI.

3. NGO OBJECTIVES AND ACTIVITIES

While all of the NGOs that responded to the survey are active in agricultural development, they tend to adopt different objectives and types of programs on which they focus. Based on information supplied by each NGO concerning its objectives, one way to classify national and international NGOs active in the agricultural sector is as follows (see Appendix 1):

- Agriculture and Rural Development

These NGOs focus on various types of extension work, the distribution of agricultural inputs, increasing agricultural production and revenues, and food security. Of the eighteen NGOs that conform to this profile, 10 are national and 8 are international.

- Cooperative/Associational Development

Only 5 NGOs emphasize cooperative or associational development by providing various types of organizational support and education to farmer associations.

- Socio-Economic Development

Within the agricultural sector, 23 NGOs (of which 13 international and 10 national) stress broader issue of poverty reduction and improvement in the quality of rural life, especially for the poorest and most vulnerable. In addition these NGOs attempt to eradicate injustice, promote greater equity, peace, and reconciliation.

- Women and Youth

The five national NGOs that conform to this profile are actively engaged in a range of agricultural and rural development activities, but do so with a specific focus on women and youth.

Within each of these categories, individual NGOs engage in a diverse range of specific programs or activities (see Figure 1 and Appendix 2). The programs, as listed by the different NGOs, may overlap (i.e., they are not necessarily mutually discrete)⁷. One-half of the NGOs are engaged in between three to five different types of programs, and 18 of them (or 36%) undertake more than five programs. There is, however, some variation in the degree of specialization between national and international NGOs. While 48% of national NGOs are involved in 1 to 3 programs, only 27% of the international NGOs fall into this range. In contrast, 45% of the international NGOs are involved in more than 5 programs, while this applies to only 28% of the national NGOs.

Total No. of NGOs are 51 (33 national and 18 international).

Some preliminary evidence from the survey suggests that lower and less certain funding may account for the different levels of program activities between national and international NGOs. In contrast to the international NGOs, most national NGOs report that limited funding represents one of their greatest weaknesses. Moreover, funding limitations directly impact the effective presence of national NGOs at the level of the commune. In some of the preliminary interviews with farmer associations, many observe that representatives from national NGOs tend to be less “visible” or less regular in their local visits than those from international NGOs.

4. GEOGRAPHIC COVERAGE

Both the national and international NGOs tend to be active in roughly the same number of préfectures. Overall, 19 NGOs (38%) operate in only one préfecture; eight (16%) intervene in two préfectures and six (12%) are active in three préfectures. Only one NGO has programs in all préfectures. Sixty five percent of the national NGOs are in 1-3 prefetures and 63% of the international NGOs are in 1-3 prefetures. Only three NGOs – all of them national – are active in more than eight prefetures.

As Table 1 illustrates, the distribution of NGOs by préfecture varies considerably throughout the country. Three préfectures (Butare, Kigali Rural, and Gitarama) receive programs from 20 or more NGOs, while five préfectures have activities managed by fewer than 10 NGOs.

Table 1. Distribution of NGOs in the Préfectures

Number of NGOs	Préfectures
Less than 10 NGOs	Cyangugu Gisenyi Kibungo Kigali Ville Ruhengeri
10-19 NGOs	Byumba Gikongoro Kibuye Umutara
More than 20 NGOs	Butare Kigali Rural Gitarama

In terms of the distribution of NGOs by program, Figure 2 below shows that Butare and Kigali Rural have the most NGOs with a focus on Agriculture and Rural Development, while Byumba, Gitarama, and Kigali Rural have the most NGOs focusing on broader Socio Economic concerns. For those other NGOs (Cooperative/Associational Development and Women and Youth) the differences between the prefectures is not great.

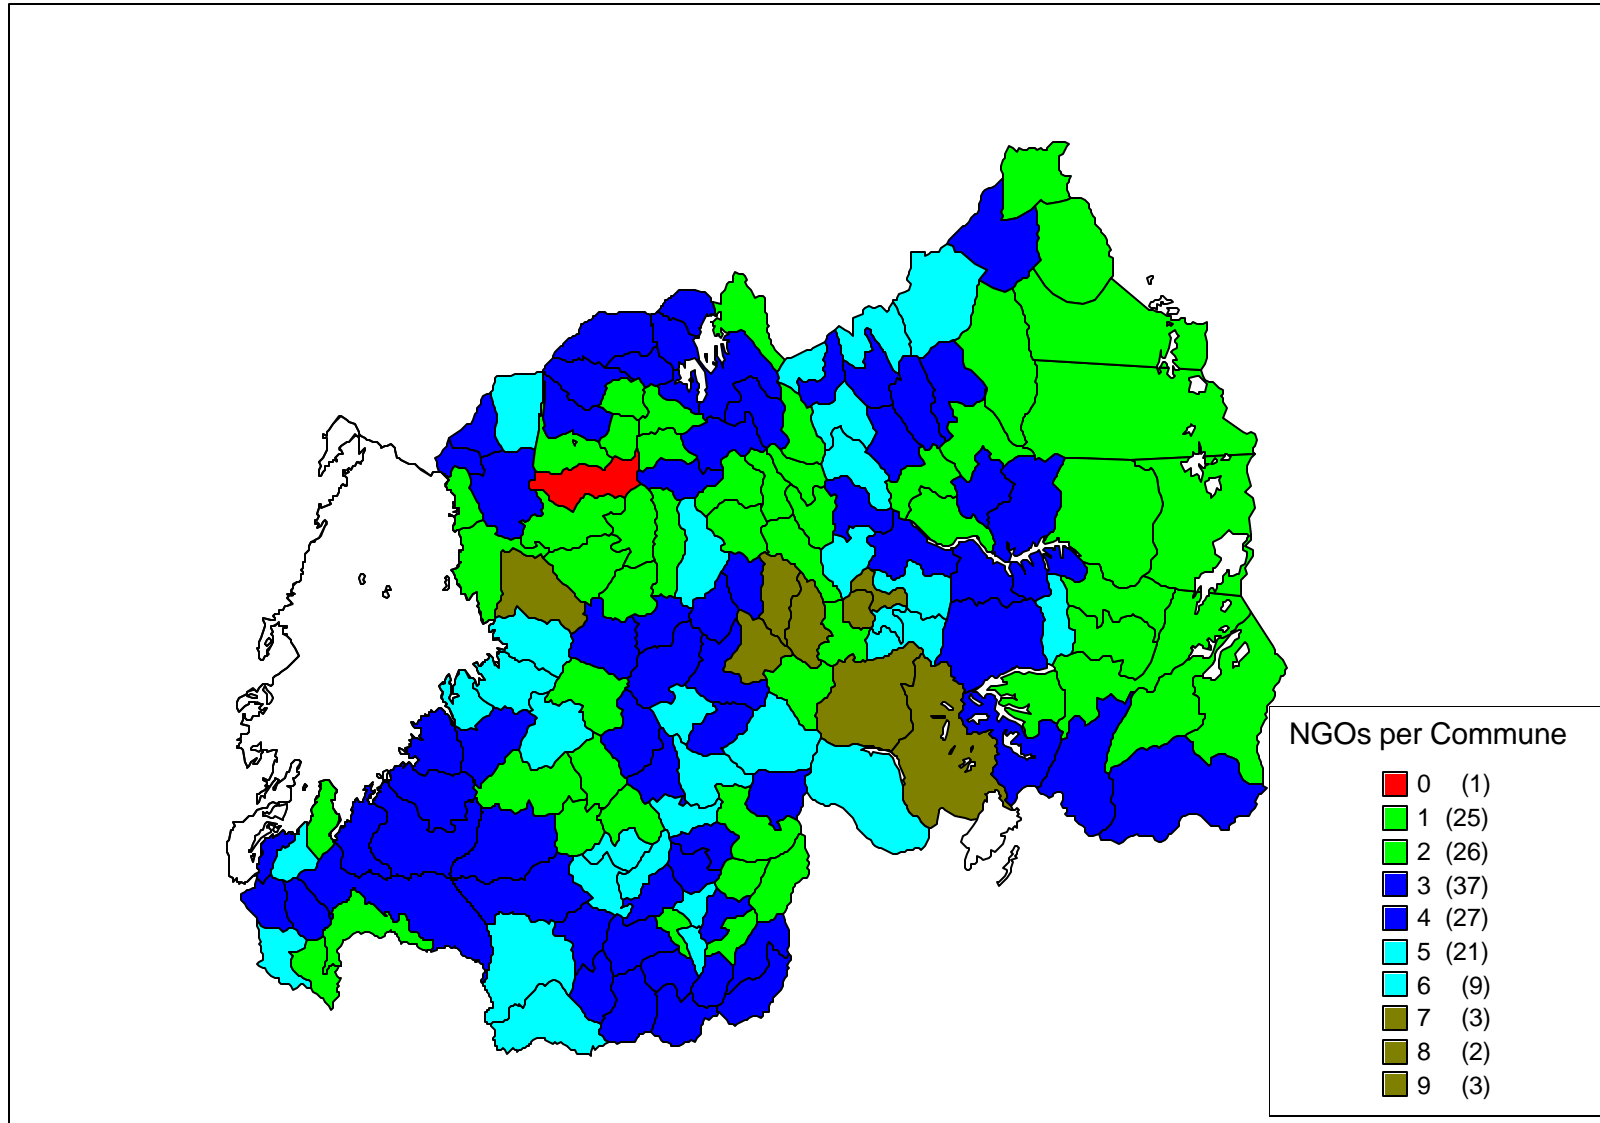

Figure 3 (see Appendices 3 & 4) shows that NGOs are active in all but one commune (Giciye commune in Gisenyi). The number of NGOs per commune, however, varies widely among the préfectures. In fact, the distribution of NGOs among the communes raises another set of questions concerning the role of national and international NGOs in Rwandan rural development. Fifty-one communes, or one-third of the sample, are covered by only one or two NGOs. Over one-half (85 communes, 55%) of the communes have three to five NGOs with programs. Seventeen communes (11%) have programs supported by more than five NGOs, and three communes have as many as nine NGOs active within their boundaries.

Moreover, as Appendices 5 & 6 indicate, not only do several NGOs engage in the same type of program (agriculture, agro-forestry, etc.) in the same préfecture, but one NGO commonly engages in several different program activities in the same préfecture. In addition, and as might be expected from the discussion above, some préfectures (especially Gisenyi and Ruhengeri) have fewer NGOs with a more limited range of program activities.

Clearly, these features of the distribution of NGO program activities raise important questions concerning: 1) how to understand the overall development contribution of NGOs; and, 2) the management of NGO activities at the level of the communes. Given the multiple activities by multiple NGOs in most préfectures, what is the best means for MINAGRI to understand the “state of agricultural and rural development” throughout the country? Or, given multiple interventions by multiple NGOs within the same commune, how can the MINAGRI and commune level officials assure that the maximum number of people benefit from these interventions?

5. CAPACITY

NGOs can vary widely in their capacity to achieve their development objectives. The skill levels and experience of personnel and logistic resources (vehicles, communication equipment, computers, etc.) can offer valuable insights into the quality of the contribution that different NGOs might make. While NGOs are commonly assumed to have some advantages over government services in their development work, the skill level and experience of the village-level NGO personnel may be roughly similar to that of government officers.

Personnel (Appendix 7)⁸

In the absence of information on the number of years of experience for NGO personnel, the employment category (linked to level of education) is one criterion that helps to illustrate the capacity of NGOs. As Table 2 below shows, both national and international NGOs rely heavily on contractual (Other) and A2 (secondary school-level) employees. Moreover, the numbers of personnel in these categories at the local level tend to be higher than those at the national (headquarters) level, thereby indicating that both national and international NGOs tend to employ these types of personnel in their field activities.

⁸ Very few NGOs provided complete information concerning their headquarters (usually national) and local level personnel. In addition, information that would have allowed a qualitative assessment of capacity – based on the number of years of service per category – could not be used because the question was not formulated precisely enough on the questionnaire.

If these categories can serve as one indicator of the capacity of NGOs to contribute to development, Table 2 suggests that international NGOs tend to have a greater capacity than national NGOs, especially at the local level. While the average number of higher-level cadres at the national level for both national and international NGOs is roughly comparable, international NGOs have a far greater capacity than national NGOs at the local level for all categories of personnel. In addition, this local level strength of the international NGOs contributes significantly to their overall comparative capacity.

Table 2. National and International NGOs: Human Resource Capacity

Average	2.4	1.2	2.6	4.9	1.4	1.5	4.0	4.6	3.8	2.7	6.6	9.6

Logistics (Appendix 8)

The availability of transport offers another and very rough indicator of the capacity of NGOs to work directly with the rural population⁹. On average, there are 6 vehicles (all types) and 4 motorbikes (all types) for each NGO (with 49 NGOs reporting). The disparity among the national and international NGOs with respect to the availability of transportation is even greater than that for personnel. Three national NGOs do not have any vehicles and 10 have only one vehicle. In contrast, international NGOs have on average eleven vehicles.

Similar disparities exist with respect to the availability of motorbikes and computers.

Budgets

Since very few NGOs offered information concerning the level of their annual budgets, this topic is not discussed here.

6. NETWORKING, PARTNERSHIPS AND FUNDING

Most national and international NGOs exchange information at the national level through separate and respective coordinating bodies, the CCOAIB for national NGOs and the NGO Forum for international NGOs. Despite these opportunities for improving collaboration and coordination, many NGOs note a certain competition among NGOs working in the same geographic areas and with similar programs. As discussed above (see Section 4), the NGOs themselves are aware of the dispersed nature of their work and the lack of consistency in their program approaches.

⁹ Clearly the number of working vehicles in itself is an inadequate indicator of capacity. Some type of index based on transportation and NGO activities would offer a much more accurate view of the quality of NGO services.

In principle, quarterly planning meetings for NGOs are held in each prefecture and local authorities are sometimes called upon to participate in program planning and implementation. Most NGOs, however, note that the level of collaboration with government services could be dramatically improved. In particular, many raise the following issues with respect to MINAGRI:

- absence of a clearly defined policy vis-à-vis NGOs;
- insufficient technical capacity at the ministerial level;
- the lack of a well-defined policy and framework for governmental-NGO collaboration.

Some feel specifically that instead of being treated as “development partners,” the government prefers to “control” their actions. In this respect, many sense the lack of a cooperative attitude on the part of MINAGRI and a very superficial approach to collaboration. Many NGOs complain about the lack of follow-up on reports submitted, delays in dealing with issues, and approving projects.

In addition to noting difficulties in obtaining sufficient resources from donors, many NGOs feel that a much more serious problem arises from the need to accommodate to donor priorities that might not be consistent with grassroots level problems. Instead of orienting their funds toward programs that might respond to identified, local-level needs, it is felt that donors allocate funds to issues or sectors that respond to donor agency priorities. In addition, many NGOs note the administrative difficulties caused by the short-term nature of most donor funding.

7. OBSERVATIONS

Based on the information presented above and in the attached appendices, the following observations are offered for discussion.

Next Steps

Improved Data Collection

Based on the information provided by NGOs on the survey forms, several questions or areas of inquiry could be improved and simplified. In collaboration with NGOs, it would be especially useful to develop more specific identifiers of NGO program activities, as well as personnel and logistic capacity. For example, the current list of activities does not help to identify the specific nature of the activity or where there might be overlapping programs. (A more discrete identification would also prevent “double counting” of activities as well.) With respect to staff capacity, perhaps an identification of the number of years of experience together with educational level would be a useful indicator.

Some indicator of the frequency with which NGO field staff members are present at local sites would also be useful. There is clearly a difference between those NGOs with the funding and logistics to assure that staff visit project sites on a frequent and regular basis and those whose lack of funding or limited logistics only permit one visit.

In sum, serious consideration should be given to the development and maintenance of a database of NGO capacity, activities, and programs.

Policy and Program Issues

The geographic and program distribution of national and international NGOs deserves further discussion and examination. From the perspective of the government, it is useful to ask if, or how the separate activities of the NGOs add up to an overall development effort. In short, is the whole greater than the sum of the separate NGO activities? NGO-supported programs appear to comprise the most significant number of development activities in each commune and préfecture. Thus, what is the most effective means for MINAGRI to acquire an overall understanding of the “development contribution” of all of the NGO activities in each préfecture? Finally, is there some way to determine if some people in some areas are not part of the NGO development activities?

More broadly, it might be useful for MINAGRI to consider expanding the database to cover a more complete set of development actors in each préfecture. The current database is limited only to information concerning NGO programs. With information concerning other actors such as development programs of other ministries, private investors, etc., it could become a more powerful development planning tool.

While more specific information on the relationships among NGOs and provincial level government services would be useful, it appears that there is some type of continuing collaboration. As many NGOs pointed out, some type of national-level framework for collaboration should also be discussed. In particular, many NGOs expect government to begin playing a more pro-active coordinating and strategy role.
